

Wandering Whidbey

Christopher Thorsen 2020

*Twenty snowy mountains and the blue green sea. . .
mirrored
in the gull's eye.*

*Winging eagle high up in strong winds. . . deeply piercing
endless blue sky.*

*Out on the bay
a raucous flock of white gulls spirals down
on hidden fish.*

*Red tail hawk soars to stillness
in the wind. . .
every feather quivering.*

*In the forest,
three white rocks
stacked up in a pile. . .
Lady Susan's stupa.*

*Hovering bee. . .mesmerized. . .
before the great unfolding
pink blossom.*

*Lighting on the leaf,
an insect folds up green wings
and blends out of sight.*

*Rain shimmering down through sunlight. . .
revealing this world
just as it is.*

*Marsh hawk drops a mouse to his mate. . .
passing below
upside-down !*

*Rabbit in scraggly weeds
trying to disappear
in utter stillness.*

*Marsh hawk drops. . .
and moments later rises. . .
talons filled
with emptiness.*

*Spiraling in blue
all round each other,
eagles in love. . .
one cries out !*

*All those squalling afternoon gulls standing silently now. . .
the setting sun.*

*Reflected through the window, eagle circling
in the dog's water dish.*

*Hummingbird spots a likely flower and zips
through the chicken wire !*

*Caterwauling coyotes . . .
only a few
completely fill
this hollow night.*

*Falling through moonlight
the white snow silences everything. . .
even the owl.*
